The median Manhattan apartment price fell for the fourth straight quarter.

Apartment prices averaged just over $2.1 million, a 3% decline from the second quarter of 2017.

Halstead.com WEB# 18620489

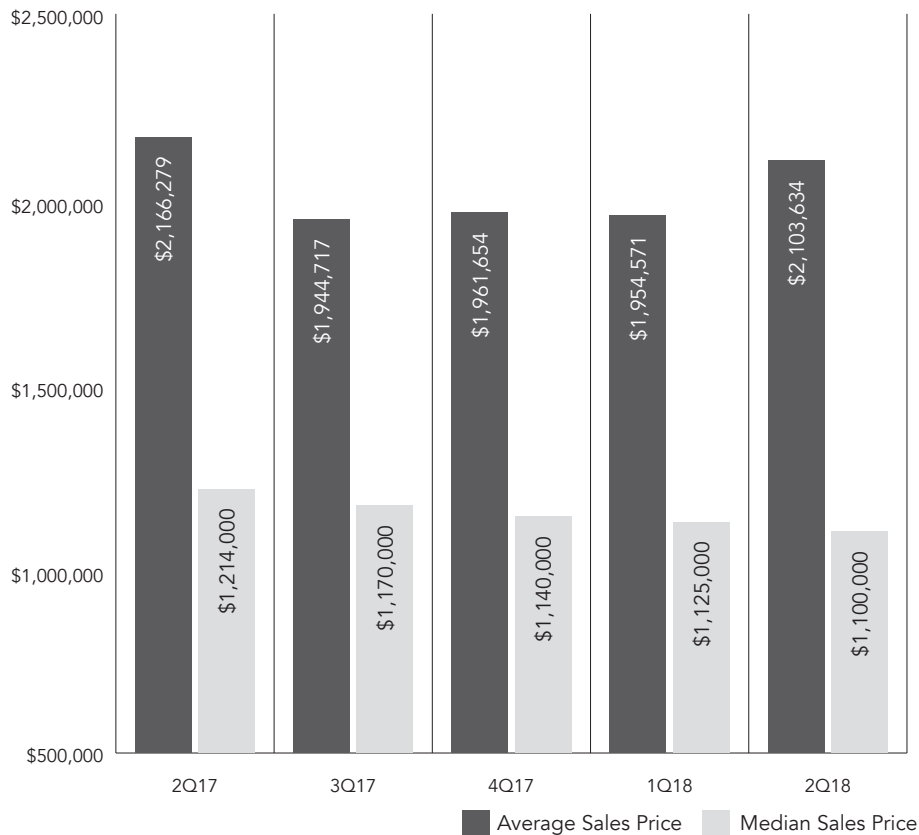

Halstead.com WEB# 18625671

Resale apartments sold for their highest discounts off asking prices in over five years.

There were 12% fewer closings than 2017's second quarter.

The median apartment price of $1,100,000 was down 9% from a year ago, and at its lowest level since the fourth quarter of 2016. A sluggish new development market continued to bring the average apartment price lower, with 30% fewer closings than a year ago. Currently, the average new apartment sells for more than double that of a resale one, so a sharp decline in these sales has a substantial impact on the overall average apartment price.

Average and Median Sales Price

Cooperative Average Sales Price

Only two-bedroom co-ops saw their average price increase over the past year, rising to $1,620,329. All other sizes posted declines in average price, as higher inventory continues to push prices lower for many apartments.

* Includes new development and resale apartments.

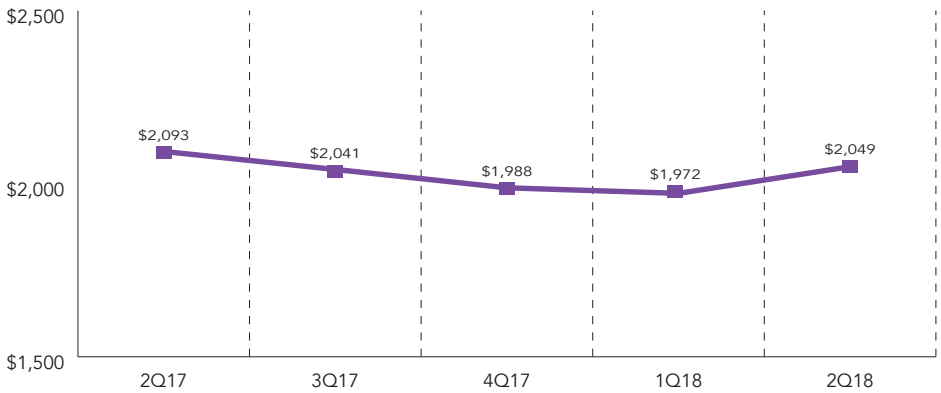

2Q18 data is preliminary and subject to revision in future reports. Data from the prior four quarters has been revised to include sales recorded after our initial reports were released.

Average and Median Sales Price

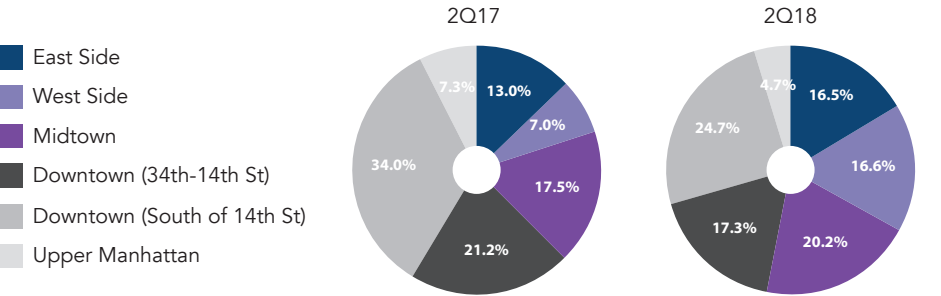

New development prices rebounded in the second quarter, but were still lower than a year ago. The big news in this market remains the dramatic slowdown in closings, which were 30% lower than the second quarter of 2017.

Average Price Per Square Foot

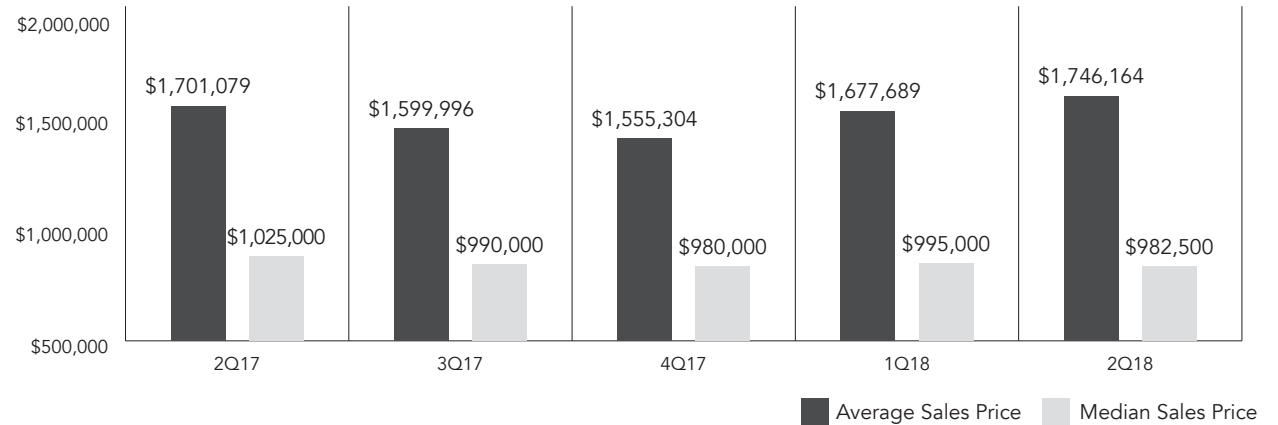

Sales by Area

The area south of 14th Street accounted for the most new development closings in the second quarter, just as it did a year ago.

Average and Median Sales Price

Aided by three closings over $40 million, the average resale apartment price was 3% higher than a year ago. Higher inventory led sellers to cut their asking prices by the highest percentage in over five years, which was the last time absorption rates were this high. The median resale apartment price of $982,500 was 4% lower than 2017's second quarter.

Cooperative Average Sales Price

Three-bedroom and larger resale co-ops saw their average price fall 7% over the past year, the largest decrease of any size category. Only two-bedroom co-ops had a higher average price compared to a year ago.
